Classics: How to Successfully Lead When You Are Not the Leader with Scott Mautz, Profound Performance

Insight of The Week

How do you successfully lead when you are not the leader?

Become a subject matter expert.

This can be on multiple different levels, but what must be true, is it must be of value to the organization.

Embrace that the team needs to succeed for you to succeed.

Take accountability for the team's results, not just your own.

Be a teacher.

Take the time to explain context, vision, impact. Teach them your skill, knowledge, and experiences. Explain the "why".

Build allies.

Allies are essential in enabling leadership at any level but are particularly critical as you are building reputation, credibility and advocacy.
